

3. Results

Green space in a city is known to lower the air temperature on a summer afternoon, but how much it lowers it varies with the size of the park and the roads around it, which this study measures. The readings were taken last summer in twelve city parks, twice a day, with the same calibrated thermometer at every site and the same height above the ground.

- Larger parks were cooler.
- Roads warmed the park edges.
- Shade mattered more than grass.